Hello Cleve, I have a question regarding the Blue Ribbon Committee. I'd like to clarify what is considered appropriate discussion of the project. I understand that committee members are not to meet outside of the meetings and discuss it, but it is ok to hear from and communicate with the general public about it, correct? I have two situations- One is a group of interested, community and culture minded people who regularly get together over coffee to brainstorm about events and endeavors for the county (many are involved in organizing music festivals and other events). Is it ok for me to meet with them to hear their input?

Second- and more important, is Kirk Smith. I know everyone is expecting him to appeal the court decision. I think there is an outside chance that we can prevent this by happening if the right person talks with him. I would like to try and extend an olive branch, alleviate some of his unfounded fears and discuss ways in which the repurposing could actually serve to showcase the history he is so protective of. It may be a shot in the dark, but I think I may be able to get through to him.

Would this be appropriate for me to do as a member of the committee?

Thanks,
Lexi
